James Thomas (b. 1996) grew up in Johannesburg. As a teenager with a passion for skateboarding and living in the inner city, he became fascinated with the visual and socio-political landscape he experienced. This unique view intrigued him and soon he started documenting his experiences, first writing, then drawing and eventually painting about his obsession with the nature of this African city.

“I know it is a cliché to refer to organised chaos, but this aspect of the city fascinates me. So I use various techniques to try and capture this chaotic order and its social dichotomies. Words are scrawled on the canvas as if a store front or bus stop and colours are harsh and monochromatic. These dualities are further emphasized by using the contrasting elements of abstraction and realism. The result is compositions that appear to be at odds with one another but when one looks at the bigger picture, it still is unified in a single reality.”

James Thomas works and Lives in Johannesburg, South Africa.
